Location

Trevi is the second district of Rome, the most accredited hypothesis is that the name derives from Trivium, which indicates the confluence of three streets in the Crociferi square. In Ancient Rome, the district housed large groupings of houses and monuments, and was already divided into two main parts: the "Lower" part flat and close to the Tiber, the other called "Alta" was the hilly area. The 'Bassa' area was the most urbanized until the Renaissance. In 1600, high urbanization, the construction of roads, churches and fountains had meant that the district was highly populated. In 1870 an old idea of the Napoleonic era was partly revived, transforming the district into a center of power. The most famous monument in the district is the Trevi Fountain. Via Rasella during the Second World War was the scene of one of the most famous actions of the Roman resistance against Nazism.
